Fusion Young Company return to the Arnolfini with their new show NAMELESS

Following acclaim for their production of Paper Wings last year, Travelling Light's FUSION young company return to the Arnolfini with NAMELESS. This new and provocative piece of theatre is written by Soho Theatre young writer Shireen Mula, in collaboration with young Bristolians. The piece is directed by Jen Camillin with an original soundtrack by Jack Kingslake and performed by members of Fusion.

NAMELESS will be staged at Arnolfini on Saturday 26th June at 7pm and Sunday 27th June at 2pm. There will also be school performances on Wed 30 June at 1pm. Post-show discussions will take place after the Sunday and Wednesday shows. Tickets are £5 or £3 for concessions and are available from the Arnolfini box office on 0117 917 2300.

After suffering a violent and seemingly unprovoked attack, Kieran lies alone in a coma. Footage of the attack filmed on a mobile phone finds its way to the Internet, where a chorus of nameless gossips retrace, distort and confuse the brutal event. As this sensitive story unfolds the audience is exposed to the harsh realities of gang loyalty and the unseen fantasies of the Facebook generation.

The show contains some references to sex and violence.

Suitable for 12yrs+.

FUSION, Travelling Light's young company, is gaining a reputation for creating powerful and contemporary theatre, fusing together new music, writing and performance.

Notes for editors:

Travelling Light is a professional theatre company that creates work for young audiences. We believe that theatre can transform young people's lives. Our plays tour to local schools and national venues whilst our participatory projects involve three youth theatre groups based in the Lawrence Hill area of Bristol and a variety of development projects within local schools. The Youth Theatre Director is Jen Camillin.

Travelling Light is funded by Arts Council England and Bristol City Council. Fusion has also been supported by Arts Council Sustain funding and the Peter Cruddas Foundation.
